friend·ed (fren′did) adj. Having friends; with friends.

friend·less (frend′lis) adj. Having no friends; forlorn. — friend′less·ness n.

friend·ly (frend′lē) adj. ·li·er, ·li·est 1 Pertaining to or like a friend; befitting friendship; amicable. 2 Propitious; favorable. — friend′li·ly, friend′ly adv. — friend′li·ness n.

Synonyms: accessible, affable, affectionate, amicable, brotherly, companionable, complaisant, cordial, favorable, fond, genial, hearty, kind, kindly, loving, neighborly, sociable, social, tender, well-disposed. Friendly, as said of persons, signifies having the disposition of a friend; as said of acts, it signifies befitting or worthy of a friend. The adjective friendly does not reach the full significance of the nouns "friend" and "friendship"; one may be friendly to those who are not his friends, and to be in friendly relations often signifies little more than not to be hostile. Affable and accessible are distinctively used of public and eminent persons, who might, if disposed, hold themselves at a distance from others. Companionable and sociable refer to manner and behavior, cordial and genial express genuine kindliness of heart and warmth of feeling. We speak of a cordial greeting, a favorable reception, a neighborly call, a sociable visitor, an amicable settlement, a kind interest, a friendly regard, a hearty welcome. The Saxon friendly is stronger than the Latin amicable. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i 78. See AMICABLE, GOOD, PROPITIOUS. Compare FRIENDSHIP. Antonyms: adverse, alienated, antagonistic, bellicose, belligerent, cold, contentious, disaffected, distant, estranged, frigid, hostile, ill-disposed, indifferent, inimical, unfriendly, unkind, warlike.

Friendly Islands See TONGA ISLANDS.

friend·ship (frend′ship) n. 1 Mutual regard cherished by kindred minds. 2 The state or fact of being friends.

Synonyms: affection, amity, attachment, comity, consideration, devotion, esteem, favor, friendliness, love, regard. Friendship is a deep, quiet, enduring affection, founded upon mutual respect and esteem. Friendship is always mutual; one may have friendly feelings toward an enemy, but while there is hostility or coldness on one side there cannot be friendship between the two. Friendliness is a quality of friendly feeling, without the deep and settled attachment implied in the state of friendship. Comity is mutual, kindly courtesy, with care of each other's right, and amity a friendly feeling and relation not necessarily implying special friendliness; as, the comity of nations, or amity between neighboring countries. Affection may be purely natural; friendship is a growth. Friendship is more intellectual and less emotional than love; it is easier to give reasons for friendship than for love; friendship is more calm and quiet, love more fervent, often rising to intensest passion.

Compare ACQUAINTANCE, ASSOCIATION, ATTACHMENT, LOVE. Antonyms: see synonyms for BATTLE, ENMITY, FEUD, HATRED.

[<OF <L fructus <frui enjoy]

Synonym (noun): vegetable. In the botanical sense not only apples, pears, peaches, tomatoes, figs, etc., but all berries, nuts, grains, beans, peas, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers, and melons, as well as pine cones, the samaras or winged seeds of the maple, ash, or elm, and many other products, are fruits. Popular usage, however, is narrower. The grains have been dropped, and the tendency is to drop nuts also, so that a fruit is now generally understood to be the fleshy and juicy product of some plant, usually tree or shrub (and nearly always containing the seed), which, when ripe, is edible without cooking, and adapted for use as a dessert as well as a salad. The quince, however, while usually cooked before eating, is classed among fruits, and we sometimes speak of poisonous fruits as the berries of the nightshade. A vegetable, in the popular sense, is any part of a herbaceous plant commonly used for culinary purposes, and may consist of the root, as in the beet and turnip; the stem, as in the asparagus, celery, and rhubarb; a tuber, or underground stem, as in the potato; the foliage, as in cabbage and spinach, or of that which is botanically the fruit, as in the tomato, bean, pea, and eggplant. See synonyms under HARVEST, PRODUCT.

geo- combining form Earth; ground; soil: geocentric, geology.

ge·o·ben·thos (jē′ə·ben′thəs) n. Ecol. That portion of the bottom of a river, stream, or lake which is destitute of vegetation. Compare PHYTOBENTHON. [<GEO- + Gk. benthos depth] ge·o·bi·on (jē′ə·bī′on) n. Ecol. A plant community adapted to the land, as distinguished from aquatic communities. [<GEO- + Gk. bios life] ge·o·bot·a·ny (jē′ō·bot′ə·nē) n. Phytogeography.

ge·o·cen·tric (jē′ō·sen′trik) adj. 1 Relating to the earth as a center. 2 Measured from the earth or the earth's center. — ge′o·cen′tri·cal adj. — ge′o·cen′tri·cal·ly adv.

ge·o·cen·tri·cism (jē′ō·sen′trə·siz′əm) n. The ancient theory that the earth is the center of the planetary system, or the central object of divine providential care.

ge·o·chem·i·cal (jē′ō·kem′i·kəl) adj. Showing the results of both geological and chemical action.

ge·o·chem·is·try (jē′ō·kem′is·trē) n. The chemistry of geological processes and of the substances taking part in them; chemical geology.

ge·o·chro·nol·o·gy (jē′ō·krə·nol′ə·jē) n. The age of the earth, as determined by the observation and study of geologic, geographic, climatic, and biological processes. — ge·o·chron·o·log·ic (jē′ō·kron′ə·loj′ik) or ·i·cal adj.

ge·ode (jē′ōd) n. Geol. 1 A stone having a cavity lined with crystals. 2 The cavity in such a stone. [<F géode <L geodes, a precious stone <Gk. geōdēs earthy] — ge·od·ic (jē·od′·ik) adj.

ge·o·des·ic (jē′ə·des′ik) adj. Of or pertaining to geodesy. — n. A geodesic line.

geodesic line Math. The shortest line connecting two points on a given surface.

ge·od·e·sy (jē·od′ə·sē) n. Math. The study and measurement of extensive areas of the earth's surface, especially with reference to the determination of the magnitude and figure of the earth: distinguished from surveying (of limited areas). [<F géodésie <NL geodaesia <Gk. geodaisia <gē earth + daiein divide] — ge·od′e·sist n.

ge·o·det·ic (jē′ə·det′ik) adj. 1 Of, pertaining to, determined, or effected by geodesy: ▪ geodetic survey. 2 Aeron. Denoting a type of aircraft construction in which all parts of the fuselage, wings, and other exposed surfaces are built along the contours where the aerodynamic strain and load stress are greatest. 3 Geodesic. Also ge′o·det′i·cal. — ge′o·det′i·cal·ly adv.

ge·o·dy·nam·ics (jē′ō·dī·nam′iks) n. The study of the forces that affect the structure and modifications of the earth. — ge′o·dy·nam′ic, ge′o·dy·nam′i·cal adj.

Geof·frey (jef′rē) A masculine personal name. See GODFREY. Also Fr. Geof·froi (zhō·frwä′). — Geoffrey of Anjou, 1113–50, father of Henry II of England: also known as Geoffrey Plantagenet. — Geoffrey of Monmouth, 1100?–54?, English chronicler.

Geof·froy Saint-Hi·laire (zhō·frwä′ saṅ·tē·lâr′), Étienne, 1772–1844, French zoologist.

ge·og·no·sy (jē·og′nə·sē) n. The study of the materials of the earth, their structure, characteristics, and interrelationships; structural geology. [<GEO- + Gk. gnōsis knowledge] ge·o·graph·ic determinism (jē′ə·graf′ik) Sociol. The theory that attributes the forms and characteristics of a given society, community, or nation to the molding influence of geographic factors.

geographic mile See under MILE.

ge·og·ra·phy (jē·og′rə·fē) n. pl. ·phies 1 The science that describes the surface of the earth and its associated physical, biological, economic, political, and demographic characteristics, especially in terms of large areas and the complex of interrelationships obtaining among them. 2 The natural aspect, features, etc., of a place or area: the geography of the Arctic. [<L geographia <Gk. <gē earth + graphein write, describe] — ge·og′ra·pher n. — ge′o·graph′ic or ·i·cal adj. — ge′o·graph′i·cal·ly adv.

ge·oid (jē′oid) n. The earth considered as an ellipsoidal solid whose surface coincides with the mean level of the ocean. [<Gk. geoidēs earthlike <gē earth + eidos form] ge·ol·o·gist (jē·ol′ə·jist) n. One versed in geology. Also ge·ol′o·ger.

ge·ol·o·gize (jē·ol′ə·jīz) v.i. ·gized, ·giz·ing 1 To study, or discourse on, geology. 2 To make geological investigations, especially in the field.

ge·ol·o·gy (jē·ol′ə·jē) n. pl. ·gies 1 The science that treats of the origin, history, constitution, and structure of the earth, including the operation of the physical forces affecting its development and appearance and the history of living or extinct forms as recorded in the rocks. See Time Scale above. 2 A treatise on this subject. See HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. —ge·o·log·ic (jē′ə·loj′ik) or ·i·cal adj. —ge′o·log′i·cal·ly adv.

ge·o·man·cy (jē′ə·man′sē) n. Divination by means of some aspect of the earth, particularly by the observation of points and lines on the earth. —ge′o·man′cer n. —ge′o·man′tic adj.

ge·o·med·i·cine (jē′ō·med′ə·sin) n. The branch of medicine that treats of the geographic factors of disease.

ge·om·e·ter (jē·om′ə·tər) n. One skilled in geometry. Also ge·om·e·tri·cian (jē·om′ə·trish′·ən, jē′ə·mə·). [< L geometres < Gk. geōmetrēs one who measures land] ge·o·met·ric (jē′ə·met′rik) adj. 1 Pertaining to or according to the rules and principles of geometry. 2 Forming, consisting of, or characterized by regular lines, curves, and angles, as the markings on certain insects, or on the primitive pottery of the Mycenaean era, which is recognized by its rectilinear decorations. Also ge′o·met′ri·cal —ge′o·met′ri·cal·ly adv.

geometric progression Math. A sequence of terms of which each member except the first is greater than its predecessor by a constant ratio, as 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64: distinguished from arithmetic progression.

ge·om·e·trid (jē·om′ə·trid) n. Any of a family (Geometridae) of moths whose larvae are called measuring worms, because they walk by moving their abdominal and anal prolegs, thus forming the body into a loop, giving the impression that they are measuring the space below. [< NL Geometridae < L geometres. See GEOMETER.]

ge·om·e·trize (jē·om′ə·triz) v.i. ·trized, ·triz·ing 1 To study geometry. 2 To apply geometric methods or principles.

ge·om·e·try (jē·om′ə·trē) n. pl. ·tries The branch of mathematics that treats of space and its relations, especially as shown in the properties and measurement of points, lines, angles, surfaces, and solids. [< OF geometrie < L geometria < Gk. geōmetria < gē earth + metrein measure] ge·o·mor·phic (jē′ə·môr′fik) adj. 1 Resembling the earth, as in contour. 2 Of or pertaining to the earth's form or the configuration of its surface features.

ge·o·mor·phol·o·gy (jē′ō·môr·fol′ə·jē) n. The study of the development, configuration, and distribution of the surface features of the earth; physiographical geology. Also ge′o·mor·phog′e·ny (-foj′ə·nē). —ge′o·mor′pho·log′i·cal (-fə·loj′i·kəl) adj.

ge·on·o·my (jē·on′ə·mē) n. The study of the earth in all its geological, physical, chemical, and mechanical aspects; earth science. —ge·o·nom·ic (jē′ə·nom′ik) adj.

ge·oph·a·gy (jē·of′ə·jē) n. Dirt-eating; morbid appetite for dirt, clay, etc. —ge·oph′a·gism (-jiz′əm) n. —ge·oph′a·gist n.

ge·o·phys·ics (jē′ə·fiz′iks) n. The science that treats of the physical forces and phenomena associated with the earth, and studies the nature of deep-lying areas by means of seismographs, the torsion balance, and various electromagnetic instruments. —ge′o·phys′i·cal adj. —ge′o·phys′i·cist n.

ge·o·phyte (jē′ə·fīt) n. Bot. An earth-growing plant; especially, one whose buds, mycelia, etc., are deeply buried in the substratum.

ge·o·pol·i·tics (jē′ō·pol′ə·tiks) n. 1 The study of geography, geology, climate, and the natural resources of the earth in relation to the development of peoples, cultures, and states. 2 A method of studying geography and power politics in terms of national security in international relations, embracing geography, natural resources, industrial development, and political strength. 3 The former German doctrine of living space as the primary element in, and strongest guaranty of, state power and world domination. See LEBENSRAUM.

ge·o·pon·ic (jē′ə·pon′ik) adj. Pertaining to agriculture; hence, rustic. [< Gk. geōponikos < geōponos a farmer < gē earth + ponos labor] ge·o·pon·ics (jē′ə·pon′iks) n. pl. The art or science of agriculture.

ge·o·po·ten·tial (jē′ə·pə·ten′shəl) n. Meteorol. The potential energy of unit mass, equal to the work required to lift it from the zero potential of sea level to its actual position: applied especially in air-mass analysis.

geor·die (jôr′dē) n. Scot. A guinea.

George (jôrj) A masculine personal name. Also Dan., Ger., Sw. Ge·org (gā′ôrg), Fr. Georges (zhôrzh) or Geor·get (zhôr·zhe′), Latin Geor·gi·us (jôr′jē·əs). [< Gk., husbandman] got (got) Past tense and past participle of GET. • have got In the sense of must, have got is in wide colloquial use to add emphasis: I have (or I've) got to leave. In the sense of possess, have got is still more common in informal speech: We have got (or We've got) plenty and intend to keep it. This usage has long been challenged on the grounds (1) that have got properly means "have acquired," and (2) that got is superfluous, since have alone would convey the same meaning. The usage is now defended as acceptable colloquial idiom on the grounds that have is so much used as an auxiliary that it has lost much of its primary sense of possess, and got therefore serves to restore and emphasize this meaning. When have is dropped, and got stands alone in the sense of must or of possess, it is illiterate, or at best dialectal, as in "I got rhythm" or "All God's chillun got wings."

—George I, 1660–1727, elector of Hanover; king of England 1714–27.

Grimm's Law A statement by J. L. K. Grimm (earlier enunciated by Rasmus Rask) of the development of the consonants from Indo-European into Germanic. Among the commonest consonantal changes are: Indo-European voiceless plosives (p, t, k), represented by Sanskrit *p*itár, Greek *t*reis, Latin *c*entum, becoming voiceless fricatives (f, th, h), as seen in English *f*ather, *th*ree, *h*undred; Indo-European aspirated voiced plosives (bh, dh, gh), represented by Sanskrit *bh*rātar, Sanskrit *dh*ā, Latin *h*ostis (IE *gh*ostis), to unaspirated voiced plosives (b, d, g), as in English *b*rother, *d*o, guest; Indo-European voiced plosives (b, d, g), represented by Latin cannabis, Greek *d*amaein, Latin *a*ger, to voiceless plosives (p, t, k), as in English hem*p*, *t*ame, a*c*re. A further development in High German accounts for the difference between English *p*ound, German *pf*und; English *t*en, German *z*ehn, English ma*k*e, German ma*ch*en; English *th*at, German *d*as. Synonyms: dissenter, heresiarch, nonconformist, schismatic. Etymologically, a heretic is one who takes or chooses his own belief, instead of the belief of his church; a schismatic is primarily one who produces a split or rent in the church. A heretic differs in doctrine from the religious body with which he is connected; a schismatic differs in doctrine or practice, or in both. A heretic may be reticent, or even silent; a schismatic introduces divisions. A heresiarch is the author of a heresy or the leader of a heretical party, and is thus at once a heretic and a schismatic. With advancing ideas of religious liberty, the odious sense once attached to these words is largely modified, and heretic is often used playfully. Dissenter and nonconformist are terms specifically applied to English subjects who hold themselves aloof from the Church of England.

Synonyms (adj.): blessed, consecrated, devoted, devout, divine, hallowed, sacred, saintly. Sacred is applied to that which is to be regarded as inviolable on any account, and so is not restricted to divine things; therefore in its lower applications it is less than holy. That which is sacred may be made so by institution, decree, or association; that which is holy is so by its own nature, possessing intrinsic moral purity, and, in the highest sense, absolute moral perfection. God is holy; his commands are sacred. Holy may be applied also to that which is hallowed; as, "the place whereon thou standest is holy ground," Ex. iii 5. In such use holy is more than sacred, as if the very qualities of a spiritual or divine presence were imparted to the place or object. Divine has been used with great looseness, denoting goodness or power in eloquence, music, etc., but the tendency is to restrict its use to attributes of the Divine Being. See PERFECT, PURE. Antonyms: abominable, common, cursed, impure, polluted, secular, unconsecrated, unhallowed, unholy, unsanctified, wicked, worldly.

hy·dra (hī′drə) n. pl. ·dras or ·drae (-drē) 1 Any evil having many forms. 2 A fresh-water polyp (genus Hydra). [<Gk. hydra water serpent]

Hy·dra (hī′drə) 1 In Greek mythology, the nine-headed serpent of Lerna, which grew two heads for each one that was cut off: slain by Hercules with a firebrand. 2 Astron. A southern constellation. See CONSTELLATION.

hy·drac·id (hī·dras′id) n. Chem. An acid that contains no oxygen, as hydrochloric acid: contrasted with oxyacid.

hy·dra·gog (hī′drə·gôg, -gog) n. Any medicine that causes abundant watery evacuations. Also hy′dra·gogue. [<F <L hydragogus <Gk. hydragōgos < hydōr water + agein lead] hy·dra-head·ed (hī′drə·hed′id) adj. Having many heads; hard to destroy.

hy·dran·ge·a (hī·drān′jē·ə, -jə) n. A plant of a genus (Hydrangea) of trees and shrubs of the saxifrage family, with opposite, usually serrate, leaves and cymose clusters of large, showy flowers. [<NL <Gk. hydōr water + angeion vessel] hy·drant (hī′drənt) n. A valved discharge pipe connected with a water main; a plug. [<Gk. hydōr water] hy·dranth (hī′dranth) n. Zool. A nutritive zooid in a hydroid colony, or the part with the mouth and digestive cavity. [<HYDRA + Gk. anthos flower]

Hy·dra·o·tes (hī′drā·ō′tēz) The ancient name for the RAVI.

hy·drar·gyr·ic (hī′drär·jir′ik) adj. Of, pertaining to, or containing mercury.

hy·drar·gy·rism (hī·drär′jə·riz′əm) n. Mercury poisoning; mercurialism.

hy·drar·gy·rum (hī·drär′jə·rəm) n. Mercury: especially so called in pharmacy. [<NL <L hydrargyrus <Gk. hydrargyros <hydōr water + argyros silver] hy·dras·tine (hī·dras′tēn, -tin) n. Chem. A bitter, crystalline alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{21}NO_6$, contained in the roots of goldenseal, having tonic and febrifuge properties. [<NL Hydrastis botanical genus name <Gk. hydōr water] hy·drate (hī′drāt) n. Chem. Any of a class of compounds formed by the union of molecules of water with other molecules or atoms. — v.t. ·drat·ed, ·drat·ing To combine with water or its elements to form a hydrate. [<HYDR- + -ATE³] — hy′drat·ed adj. — hy·dra·tion (hī·drā′shən) n.

hy·drau·lic (hī·drô′lik) adj. 1 Pertaining to hydraulics, involving the moving of water, or force exerted by water: hydraulic engineering, mining, etc. 2 Denoting any of various machines and structures operating by means of water or other liquid under pressure: a hydraulic elevator, crane, ram, press, etc. 3 Hardening under water: hydraulic cement. Also hy·drau′li·cal. [<L hydraulicus <Gk. hydraulikos of a water organ <hydraulos water organ <hydōr water + aulos pipe] — hy·drau′li·cal·ly adv.

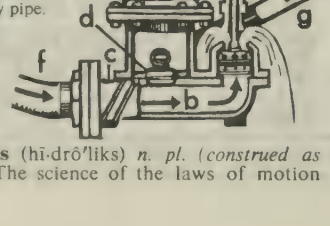
hydraulic brake A brake actuated by fluids under pressure in cylinders and tubular connecting lines.

hydraulic press A machine which operates by means of fluid under pressure to exert a large force over an extended area: used in forming steel dies, in baling, etc.

hydraulic ram An automatic device by which the fall of a comparatively large quantity of water furnishes the power to raise a smaller quantity to a height above that of the source.



HYDRAULIC RAM
a. Air chamber.
b. Water chamber.
c. Air inlet.
d. Check valve.
e. Clack valve.
f. Supply pipe.
g. Delivery pipe.

hy·drau·lics (hī·drô′liks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The science of the laws of motion of water and other liquids and of their practical applications.

hydraulic transmission See FLUID DRIVE.

hy·dra·zine (hī′drə·zēn, -zin) n. Chem. 1 A colorless fuming liquid, N_2H_4, derived from diazoacetic acid: used as a reducing agent in organic synthesis and as a fuel in jet engines. 2 One of a group of compounds derived from the foregoing by replacement of one or more hydrogen atoms by another radical: phenyl hydrazine. [<HYDR- + AZ(O) + -INE²] hy·dra·zo·ic (hī′drə·zō′ik) adj. Chem. Of or pertaining to a colorless, very toxic acid, HN_3, obtained from hydrazine by various methods; its salts, hy·dra·zo·ates (hī′drə·zō′āts), explode with great violence when heated.

hy·dric (hī′drik) adj. Of or pertaining to hydrogen in combination.

hy·dride (hī′drīd, -drid) n. Chem. 1 A compound of hydrogen with another element or a radical acting as an element. 2 A hydroxide. Also hy′drid (-drid).

hy·dri·od·ic (hī′drē·od′ik) adj. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a dense, colorless, suffocating acid, HI, soluble in water, formed by the union of hydrogen and iodine.

hydro– combining form 1 Water; of, related to, or resembling water: hydrophone. 2 Chem. Denoting a compound of hydrogen: hydrochloric. Also, before vowels, hydr–. [<Gk. hydro- <hydōr water] hy·dro-air·plane (hī′drō·âr′plān′) See HYDROPLANE (def. 1).

hy·dro·bro·mic (hī′drə·brō′mik) adj. Chem. Designating a colorless, pungent acid, HBr, formed by the union of hydrogen and bromine.

hy·dro·car·bon (hī′drə·kär′bən) n. Chem. One of a large and important group of compounds that contain hydrogen and carbon only. There are many types and classes, including the aliphatic, aromatic, saturated, and unsaturated hydrocarbons.

hy·dro·cele (hī′drə·sēl) n. Pathol. A localized accumulation of fluid surrounding the testicles or along the spermatic cord. [<L <Gk. hydrokēlē < hydōr water + kēlē tumor] hy·dro·ceph·a·lus (hī′drə·sef′ə·ləs) n. Pathol. An accumulation of watery fluid within the ventricles or between the membranes of the brain. [<HYDRO- + Gk. kephalē head] — hy′·dro·ceph′a·loid (-loid), hy′dro·ceph′a·lous adj.

hy·dro·chlo·ric (hī′drə·klôr′ik, -klō′rik) adj. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a colorless, corrosive, fuming acid, HCl, exceedingly soluble in water, in which form it is largely used in manufactures and sometimes called muriatic acid.

hy·dro·chlo·ride (hī′drə·klôr′īd, -klō′rīd) n. Chem. A compound produced by the union of hydrochloric acid with an element or radical.

hy·dro·cy·an·ic (hī′drō·sī·an′ik) adj. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or designating an unstable, volatile, colorless, and extremely poisonous acid, HCN, formed by decomposing metallic cyanides with hydrochloric acid. It is only slightly dissociated in water, and has a characteristic odor resembling that of bitter almonds: also called prussic acid.

hy·dro·dy·nam·ic (hī′drō·dī·nam′ik) adj. Of or pertaining to the force or pressure of water or other fluids. Also hy′dro·dy·nam′i·cal.

hy·dro·dy·nam·ics (hī′drō·dī·nam′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The branch of mechanics that treats of the dynamics of fluids, chiefly water and other liquids.

hy·dro·e·lec·tric (hī′drō·i·lek′trik) adj. Of or pertaining to electricity developed by water power, or by the escape of steam under high pressure, etc. — hy·dro·e·lec·tric·i·ty (hī′drō·i·lek·tris′ə·tē) n.

hy·dro·flu·or·ic (hī′drō·flōō·ôr′ik, -or′-) adj. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a volatile, colorless, hygroscopic, corrosive acid, HF, formed by decomposing metallic fluorides. It readily attacks silica, hence is used for etching on glass.

hy·dro·foil (hī′drə·foil) n. A streamlined surface designed to provide support in or obtain a reaction from the water through which it moves, as an attachment to a boat, submarine, or hydroplane.

hy·dro·gel (hī′drə·jel) n. Chem. A colloid which has assumed a jellylike form in the presence of water.

hy·dro·gen (hī′drə·jən) n. The lightest of the elements (symbol H) occurring chiefly in combination with oxygen as water, and in hydrocarbons and other organic compounds. When isolated it is usually a colorless, odorless, tasteless, inflammable gas, lighter than air and liquefying under great pressure and low temperature. — heavy hydrogen See DEUTERIUM. [<F hydrogène <Gk. hydōr water + gen-, stem of gignesthai be born; so called with ref. to the water formed by its combustion] — hy·drog·e·nous (hī·droj′ə·nəs) adj.

hy·dro·gen·ate (hī′drə·jə·nāt′) v.t. ·at·ed, ·at·ing Chem. 1 To cause to combine with hydrogen. 2 To expose to hydrogen, or to effect chemical action of by the use of or by exposure to hydrogen: to hydrogenate fats and oils. Also hy′dro·gen·ize′ (-īz′).

hy·dro·gen·a·tion (hī′drə·jə·nā′shən) n. Chem. The act or process of subjecting to the action of hydrogen, usually in the presence of a catalyst: the hydrogenation of coal to form liquid hydrocarbons.

hydrogen bomb A bomb of great destructive power, releasing enormous quantities of energy by the fusion, under extremely high temperatures, of deuterium or tritium atoms, with the formation of helium.

hydrogen cyanide Hydrocyanic acid.

hydrogen ion Chem. The positively charged hydrogen ion (H^+) present in all acids. The number of hydrogen ions per unit volume of an aqueous solution is known as the hydrogen ion concentration, or *p*H value.

hydrogen peroxide Chem. A sirupy liquid, H_2O_2, whose aqueous solutions are important as antiseptics and bleaching agents, the usual solution being a slightly acid one containing about 3 percent by weight of pure hydrogen peroxide. Also called peroxide.

hydrogen sulfide Chem. A colorless, gaseous compound, H_2S, having a characteristic odor of rotten eggs, made by decomposing certain metallic sulfides, chiefly iron, by means of acids. It is poisonous and is a valuable laboratory reagent.

hy·dro·glid·er (hī′drə·glī′dər) n. A glider with floats attached to permit it to land on or take off from water.

Hy·dro·graph·ic Office (hī′drə·graf′ik) A bureau of the U. S. Navy Department in charge of the charting of navigable waters and the studying of oceanography.

hy·drog·ra·phy (hī·drog′rə·fē) n. The science of determining and making known the conditions of navigable waters, charting rivers, coasts, etc. — hy·drog′ra·pher n. — hy′dro·graph′ic or ·i·cal adj.

hy·droid (hī′droid) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a class (Hydrozoa) of mostly marine coelenterates resembling the hydra; like a polyp. 2 Designating a reproductive phase in the development of certain hydrozoans characterized by the formation of colonies. — n. A hydrozoan.

hy·dro·ki·net·ic (hī′drō·ki·net′ik) adj. Relating to the motion and kinetic energy of fluids. Also hy′dro·ki·net′i·cal.

hy·dro·ki·net·ics (hī′drō·ki·net′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The branch of hydrodynamics that treats of fluids in motion.

hy·drol·o·gy (hī·drol′ə·jē) n. The branch of physical geography that treats of the waters of the earth, their distribution, characteristics, and effects. [<HYDRO- + -LOGY] — hy·dro·log·ic (hī′drə·loj′ik) or ·i·cal adj. — hy′dro·log′i·cal·ly adv. — hy·drol′o·gist n.

hy·drol·y·sis (hī·drol′ə·sis) n. Chem. Any decomposition involving the addition of water; specifically, a double decomposition reaction between water and some other compound, as phosphorus trichloride. [<HYDRO- + -LYSIS] — hy·dro·lyt·ic (hī′drə·lit′ik) adj.

hy·dro·lyte (hī′drə·līt) n. Any substance affected by hydrolysis.

hy·dro·lyze (hī′drə·līz) v.t. & v.i. ·lyzed, ·lyz·ing To undergo or cause to undergo the process of hydrolysis. — hy′dro·lyz′a·ble adj. — hy·dro·ly·za·tion (hī′drə·lə·zā′shən, -lī·zā′-) n.

hy·dro·man·cy (hī′drə·man′sē) n. Divination by means of water. — hy′dro·manc′er n. — hy′dro·man′tic (-tik) adj.

hy·dro·me·chan·ics (hī′drō·mə·kan′iks) n. The mechanics of fluids, including hydrostatics, hydrodynamics, hydrokinetics, and pneumatics. — hy′dro·me·chan′i·cal adj.

hy·dro·me·du·sa (hī′drō·mə·dōō′sə, -dyōō′-) n. pl. ·sae (-sē) A type of coelenterate produced by budding from an individual, as the jellyfish and medusa.

hy·dro·mel (hī′drə·mel) n. A liquor, usually unfermented, consisting of honey diluted with water; when fermented, it is called mead. [<L <Gk. hydromeli < hydōr water + meli honey] hy·dro·met·al·lur·gy (hī′drō·met′əl·ûr′jē) n. The process of assaying or reducing ore by means of liquid reagents. — hy′dro·met′al·lur′gi·cal adj.

hy·dro·me·te·or (hī′drō·mē′tē·ər) n. Meteorol. A watery or aqueous meteor; any of the conditions or effects produced by water, as rain, snow, hail, etc.

hy·dro·me·te·or·ol·o·gy (hī′drō·mē′tē·ə·rol′ə·jē) n. The branch of meteorology that treats of hydrometeors or of water in the atmosphere.

hy·drom·e·ter (hī·drom′ə·tər) n. 1 A calibrated sealed tube weighted at one end for determining the density or specific gravity, especially of liquids and solutions: also called densimeter. 2 A current gage. — hy·dro·met·ric (hī′drə·met′rik) or ·ri·cal adj. — hy·drom′e·try n.

hy·drop·a·thy (hī·drop′ə·thē) n. The treatment of diseases by the use of water; water cure. — hy·dro·path·ic (hī′drə·path′ik) or ·i·cal adj. — hy·drop′a·thist, hy′dro·path n.

hy·dro·phane (hī′drə·fān) n. A whitish or light-colored opal, opaque when dry, but translucent when wet. — hy·droph·a·nous (hī·drof′ə·nəs) adj.

hy·droph·i·lous (hī·drof′ə·ləs) adj. Bot. Having the flowers pollinated by the agency of water: said of certain higher plants. [< HYDRO- + Gk. philos loving] hy·dro·pho·bi·a (hī′drə·fō′bē·ə) n. 1 Rabies. 2 Any morbid dread of water. [<L <Gk., < hydōr water + phobos fear] — hy′dro·pho′bic adj.

hy·dro·phone (hī′drə·fōn) n. 1 An electrical instrument for detecting underwater sounds, especially of enemy submarines. 2 A device used for the purpose of detecting leaks in water pipes.

hy·dro·phyte (hī′drə·fīt) n. Bot. A plant living in water or in wet ground. — hy·dro·phyt·ic (hī′drə·fit′ik) adj.

hy·drop·ic (hī·drop′ik) adj. Dropsical; affected with dropsy. Also hy·drop′i·cal. [<OF idropique <L hydropicus <Gk. hydrōpikos < hydrōps dropsy < hydōr water] — hy·drop′i·cal·ly adv.

hy·dro·plane (hī′drə·plān) n. 1 An airplane constructed for alighting upon or rising from the water: also called hydroairplane. 2 A motorboat of extremely light construction driven either by submerged screws or by aerial propellers. 3 A hydrofoil. — v.i. ·planed, ·plan·ing 1 To move on water at a speed sufficient to give support through hydrodynamic and aerodynamic forces alone. 2 To drive or ride in a hydroplane.

hy·dro·pon·ics (hī′drə·pon′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) Soilless agriculture; the raising of plants in nutrient mineral solutions without earth around the roots: also called water culture, tank farming. [<HYDRO- + Gk. ponos labor] — hy′dro·pon′ic adj.

hy·drop·sy (hī′drop′sē) n. Dropsy. Also hy′·drops, hy·drop′si·a.

hy·dro·qui·none (hī′drō·kwi·nōn′) n. Chem. A white crystalline compound, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, derived from quinone: used in medicine as an antiseptic and antipyretic, and in photography as a developing agent. Also hy′dro·quin′ol (-kwin′ōl, -ol).

hy·dro·scope (hī′drə·skōp) n. 1 An instrument for detecting moisture, especially in the air. 2 An instrument for seeing through considerable depths of water. — hy′dro·scop′ic (-skop′ik) or ·i·cal adj.

hy·dro·sere (hī′drə·sir) n. Ecol. In plant succession, the series of changes in vegetation which take place in the water. [<HYDRO- + SERE²] hy·dro·sol (hī′drə·sol, -sōl) n. Chem. A water solution of a colloid. [<HYDRO- + SOL(UTION)] hy·dro·some (hī′drə·sōm) n. Zool. A hydroid colony as a whole. Also hy′dro·so′ma (-sō′mə). [<HYDRO- + -SOME²] hy·dro·sphere (hī′drə·sfir) n. 1 The total water surrounding the earth. 2 The atmospheric moisture enveloping the globe, in distinction from the atmosphere itself.

hy·dro·stat (hī′drə·stat) n. 1 A contrivance for preventing the explosion of steam boilers. 2 An electrical device for making known the presence of water, as a protection against leakage, overflow, etc.

hy·dro·stat·ic (hī′drə·stat′ik) adj. Pertaining to hydrostatics. Also hy′dro·stat′i·cal.

hy·dro·stat·ics (hī′drə·stat′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The science of the pressure and equilibrium of fluids, as water.

hy·dro·sul·fate (hī′drə·sul′fāt) n. Chem. A compound of sulfuric acid and an alkaloid or other organic base.

hy·dro·sul·fide (hī′drə·sul′fīd) n. Chem. A compound derived from hydrogen sulfide, by replacing one of the hydrogen atoms with a basic radical or a base.

hy·dro·sul·fite (hī′drə·sul′fīt) n. Sodium hydrosulfite.

hy·dro·sul·fu·rous (hī′drō·sul·fyŏŏr′əs, hī′drə·sul′fər·əs) See HYPOSULFUROUS.

hy·dro·tax·is (hī′drə·tak′sis) n. Biol. 1 The irritable response or turning of organisms under the influence of humidity or water. 2 The action of moisture in determining the direction of motion, as in protoplasm. — hy′dro·tac′tic (-tak′tik) adj.

hy·dro·the·ca (hī′drə·thē′kə) n. A calicle. [< NL <Gk. hydōr water + thēkē case] hy·dro·ther·a·peu·tics (hī′drō·ther′ə·pyōō′tiks) n. Hydropathy. Also hy′dro·ther′a·py (-ther′ə·pē). — hy′dro·ther′a·peu′tic adj.

hy·dro·ther·mal (hī′drə·thûr′məl) adj. Geol. Of, pertaining to, or produced by action of heated or superheated water, especially the action of such water in dissolving, transporting, and redepositing mineral matter.

hy·dro·tho·rax (hī′drə·thôr′aks, -thō′raks) n. Pathol. An accumulation of fluid in the pleural cavity; dropsy of the chest. — hy·dro·tho·rac·ic (hī′drō·thə·ras′ik) adj.

hy·drot·ro·pism (hī·drot′rə·piz′əm) n. Bot. The phenomena of curvature induced in a growing plant organ by the stimulation of moisture. — hy·dro·trop·ic (hī′drə·trop′ik) adj.

hy·drous (hī′drəs) adj. Chem. 1 Watery; containing water of crystallization or hydration. 2 Containing hydrogen.

Hy·dro·vize (hī′drə·vīz) v.t. ·vized, ·viz·ing To make (a textile fabric) rainproof and resistant to stains, winds, and perspiration by the application to its surface of a water repellent: a trade name.

hy·drox·ide (hī·drok′sīd) n. Chem. A compound containing hydroxyl.

hy·drox·y (hī·drok′sē) adj. Chem. Any of a class of compounds containing the hydroxyl radical: a hydroxy acid.

hy·drox·yl (hī·drok′sil) n. Chem. The univalent radical OH, consisting of one atom of oxygen and one of hydrogen. It occurs in alcohols, most acids, and many organic compounds. [<HYDR- + OX(YGEN) + -YL] hy·drox·yl·a·mine (hī·drok′sil·ə·mēn′, -am′in) n. Chem. A colorless crystalline organic base, NH_2OH, formed by the partial reduction of nitric acid, but usually obtained as an unstable solution in water. In chemical behavior it is similar to ammonia.

Hy·dro·zo·a (hī′drə·zō′ə) n. pl. A class of coelenterates, mostly marine, including jellyfishes, polyps, etc. — hy′dro·zo′an adj. & n.

Hy·drus (hī′drəs) A southern constellation. [<Gk. hydros water snake] hy·e·na (hī·ē′nə) n. A catlike carnivorous mammal of Africa and Asia (family Hyaenidae) with very strong, large teeth, striped or spotted body, and skulking habits, as the African laughing hyena (Hyaena brunnea) and the spotted hyena (Crocuta crocuta): also spelled hyaena. [<L hyaena <Gk. hyaina < hys pig]

HYENA
(About 2 feet high at the shoulder)

Hyères (yâr′) A port and resort in SE France.

hy·e·tal (hī′ə·təl) adj. Meteorol. 1 Of or pertaining to rain or the amount of the rainfall at different places and seasons. 2 Rainy.

hyeto- combining form Rain: hyetograph. Also, before vowels, hyet-. [<Gk. hyetos rain < hyein rain] hy·e·to·graph (hī′i·tə·graf′, -gräf′) n. Meteorol. A chart showing the distribution of rainfall over the earth, or over any part of it.

hy·e·to·graph·ic (hī′i·tə·graf′ik) adj. Meteorol. Relating to or showing the amount of rainfall: a hyetographic map. Also hy′e·to·graph′i·cal.

hy·e·tog·ra·phy (hī′i·tog′rə·fē) n. The branch of meteorology that treats of the distribution of rainfall, and of the exhibition of it graphically in charts, maps, etc.

hy·e·tol·o·gy (hī′i·tol′ə·jē) n. That branch of meteorology which treats of precipitation. [<HYETO- + -LOGY] — hy·e·to·log·i·cal (hī′i·tə·loj′i·kəl) adj.

Hy·ge·ia (hī·jē′ə) In Greek mythology, the goddess of health; daughter of Aesculapius, the god of medicine: identified with the Roman Salus. Also Hy·ge′a, Hy·gi′a (-jī′ə). [<Gk. hygeia health] — Hy·ge′ian adj.

hy·giene (hī′jēn, -ji·ēn) n. The branch of medical science that relates to the preservation of health; sanitary science. [<F hygiène <Gk. hygienios healthful] hy·gi·en·ic (hī′jē·en′ik, hī·jē′nik) adj. Pertaining to hygiene; sanitary. See synonyms under HEALTHY. — hy′gi·en′i·cal·ly adv.

hy·gi·en·ics (hī′jē·en′iks, hī·jē′niks) n. The science of preserving and promoting health.

hy·gi·en·ist (hī′jē·ən·ist) n. One who studies or is versed in the principles of hygiene. Also hy′ge·ist (-jē·ist), hy′gie·ist.

hygro- combining form Wet; denoting relation to moisture. [<Gk. hygros wet] hy·gro·graph (hī′grə·graf, -gräf) n. A recording hygrometer.

hy·grom·e·ter (hī·grom′ə·tər) n. An instrument for ascertaining the humidity or degree of moisture in the atmosphere. [<HYGRO- + -METER] hy·gro·met·ric (hī′grə·met′rik) adj. 1 Pertaining to hygrometry or the state of the atmosphere as to moisture. 2 Readily absorbing and retaining moisture. Also hy′gro·met′ri·cal.

hy·grom·e·try (hī·grom′ə·trē) n. The branch of physics that treats of the measurement of degrees of moisture, especially the moisture of the air.

hy·gro·scope (hī′grə·skōp) n. A device for approximating the humidity of the air.

hy·gro·scop·ic (hī′grə·skop′ik) adj. 1 Pertaining to the hygroscope, or capable of being detected only by it. 2 Able to absorb or condense moisture from the atmosphere, as glycerol. 3 Expanding or shrinking according to the amount of moisture: said of plants.

Hyk·sos (hik′sōs, -sos) A dynasty of kings of Egypt, probably of Syro-Semitic origin, who ruled at Memphis 1685–1580 B.C.: often called Shepherd Kings.

hy·la (hī′lə) n. The tree frog (genus Hyla). [<NL <Gk. hyle wood]

Hy·las (hī′ləs) In Greek mythology, a beautiful youth, loved by Hercules, whose companion he was on the cruise of the Argonauts; he was stolen by Naiads while bathing in a spring at Mysia.

hy·lic (hī′lik) adj. Relating to or of the nature of matter; material. — hy′li·cism (-lə·siz′əm) n.

hy·li·cist (hī′lə·sist) n. A believer or teacher of materialism; specifically, one of the early Ionic philosophers.

hy·lism (hī′liz·əm) n. 1 Materialism. 2 The theory that matter is the principle or source of evil.

hylo- combining form Related to matter; material: hylotropic. Also, before vowels, hyl-. [<Gk. hylē wood] hy·lo·the·ism (hī′lə·thē′iz·əm) n. The doctrine of belief that the material universe is God; pantheism.

hy·lo·trop·ic (hī′lə·trop′ik, -trō′pik) adj. Having the capacity to change in form without change in composition; as ice, water, and steam.

hy·lo·zo·ism (hī′lə·zō′iz·əm) n. The doctrine that life and matter are inseparable. [<HYLO- + Gk. zōē life] — hy′lo·zo′ic adj. — hy′lo·zo′·ist n. — hy′lo·zo·is′tic adj.

hy·men (hī′mən) n. 1 Anat. A thin mucous membrane partially covering the entrance of the vagina; the virginal membrane or maidenhead. 2 The wedded state; marriage. [<Gk. hymēn membrane] hy·po·ge·al (hī'pə·jē'əl, hip'ə-) adj. 1 Geol. Situated beneath the surface of the earth, or underlying the superficial outcropping strata. 2 Hypogeous. [<HYPO- + Gk. gē earth] hyp·o·gene (hip'ə·jēn) adj. Geol. 1 Formed beneath the earth's surface, as granite. 2 Pertaining to or caused by subterranean agencies; plutonic: contrasted with epigene and volcanic.

hy·pog·e·nous (hī·poj'ə·nəs, hi-) adj. Bot. Growing beneath, as fungi on the under surface of a leaf. Compare EPIGENOUS. [<HYPO- + -GENOUS] hyp·o·ge·ous (hip'ə·jē'əs, hī'pə-) adj. 1 Underground. 2 Bot. Growing or fruiting underground, as truffles and other fungi. [<L hypogeus <Gk. hypogeios < hypo- under + gē earth] hyp·o·ge·um (hip'ə·jē'əm, hī'pə-) n. pl. ·ge·a (-jē'ə) 1 Archit. The part of a building below the ground. 2 Any underground structure; an artificial cave. [<L <Gk. hypogetos subterranean] hy·po·glos·sal (hī'pə·glos'əl, hip'ə-) adj. Biol. Of or pertaining to a nerve situated under the tongue in birds, reptiles, and mammals; underneath the tongue. — n. A hypoglossal nerve. [<HYPO- + Gk. glōssa tongue] hy·pog·y·nous (hī·poj'ə·nəs, hi-) adj. Bot. Situated on or growing from the receptacle of the flower beneath the ovary or pistil. [<HYPO- + GYNOUS] — hy·pog'y·ny n.

hy·po·ma·ni·a (hī'pə·mā'nē·ə, -mān'yə, hip'ə-) n. A mild form of mania; a condition of moderate elation and overactivity.

hyp·o·nas·ty (hip'ə·nas'tē, hī'pə-) n. Bot. A state of curvature induced in an extending plant organ by the excessively active growth of its lower side, causing it to bend downward. Compare EPINASTY. [<HYPO- + Gk. nastos compact] — hyp'o·nas'tic adj. — hyp'o·nas'ti·cal·ly adv.

hy·po·ni·trous (hī'pə·nī'trəs) adj. Chem. Designating an unstable white crystalline nitrogenous acid, $(HNO)_2$, formed by the union of hydroxylamine and nitrous acid, and in other ways. Its salts are known as hy'po·ni'trites (-trīts).

hy·po·phos·phate (hī'pə·fos'fāt) n. Chem. A salt of hypophosphoric acid.

hy·po·phos·phite (hī'pə·fos'fīt) n. Chem. A salt of hypophosphorous acid.

hy·po·phos·phor·ic (hī'pō·fos·fôr'ik, -for'ik) adj. Chem. Denoting a crystalline tetrabasic acid, $H_4P_2O_6$, formed from moist phosphorus by oxidation.

hy·po·phos·pho·rous (hī'pə·fos'fər·əs) adj. Chem. Denoting a monobasic acid derived from phosphorus, H_3PO_2, a powerful reducing agent.

hy·poph·y·ge (hī·pof'ə·jē, hi-) n. Archit. A horizontal rounded groove under a structural member, as in the case of archaic Doric capitals. [<Gk. hypophygē refuge, recess < hypo- under + pheugein flee] hy·poph·y·sis (hī·pof'ə·sis, hi-) n. pl. ·ses (-sēz) Anat. A process or outgrowth. [<NL <Gk.,

an undergrowth <hypo- under + physis nature <phyein grow] hypophysis cer·e·bri (ser′ə·brī) Anat. The pituitary gland. [<NL, outgrowth of the brain] hy·po·pi·tu·i·ta·rism (hī′pō·pi·tōō′i·tə·riz′əm, -tyōō′-) n. Pathol. 1 Diminished activity of the pituitary gland. 2 Any condition produced by this, marked by excessive fat and by adolescent traits.

hy·po·pla·si·a (hī′pə·plā′zhē·ə, -zhə, hip′ə-) n. Pathol. The condition of arrested development. — hy′po·plas′tic (-plas′tik) adj.

hy·po·ploid (hī′pə·ploid, hip′ə-) adj. Biol. Denoting a chromosome number less than the basic number. — hy′po·ploid′y n.

hy·po·pne·a (hī′pə·nē′ə, hip′ə-) n. Med. Abnormal rapidity and shallowness of breathing, as from hypoventilation. Also hy′po·pnoe′a. [<NL <Gk. hypo- under + pnoē breathing <pneein breathe] hy·po·py·on (hī·pō′pē·on, hi-) n. Pathol. An accumulation of pus in the cavity of the eye which contains the aqueous humor. [<NL <Gk., a kind of ulcer <hypo- under + pyon pus] hy·po·scope (hī′pə·skōp) n. A form of altiscope for military use, as a sighting attachment to a rifle, etc.

-ics suffix of nouns 1 Art, science, or field of study of: mathematics. 2 Methods, practices, or activities of: athletics. [See -IC]

-ic, -ics Adjectives in Greek, ending in -ikē (feminine singular) and -ika (neuter plural) were often used as nouns to indicate the names of arts or the various departments of life and knowledge. These words were borrowed, through Latin -ica, as singular nouns in the Romance languages and later into English. After the 16th century, it became customary to use the plural form in -ics, on analogy with Greek -ika: optics, logistics, acoustics. Nouns ending in -ics are construed as singular when they strictly denote an art, science, or system (as, mathematics is difficult; politics offers an uncertain future); they are construed as plural if they denote personal attributes (as, his mathematics are poor; his politics are suspect), if they denote inherent qualities (as, the acoustics are bad) or specific activities (as, athletics are compulsory; hysterics are unseemly; our tactics are superior to the enemy's).

i·de·a (ī·dē′ə) n. 1 Any notion or thought: the idea of a horse or of happiness. 2 The result of thinking; a definitely formulated thought; an opinion: a clear idea of social justice. 3 A plan or project: to have an idea of going into business. 4 A concept; a mental representation of something perceived through the senses. 5 A vague thought or fancy; supposition: I had no idea you'd come. 6 Colloq. Meaning; aim: What's the idea? 7 In Platonic philosophy, the archetype or external pattern of which all existing things are imperfect representations. 8 Obs. The embodiment of a conception, belief, or view. [<L <Gk. < idein see]

Synonyms: apprehension, archetype, belief, conceit, concept, conception, design, fancy, fantasy, ideal, image, imagination, impression, judgment, model, notion, opinion, pattern, plan, purpose, sentiment, supposition, theory, thought. Idea is in Greek a form or an image. The sense implied by early Platonic philosophy has nearly disappeared and has been largely appropriated by ideal, but something of the original meaning still appears when in theological or philosophical language we speak of the ideas of God. The present popular use of idea makes it signify any product of mental apprehension or activity, considered as an object of knowledge or thought; this coincides with the primitive sense at but a single point—that an idea is mental as opposed to anything substantial or physical; thus, almost any mental product, as a belief, conception, design, opinion, etc., may now be called an idea. Compare FANCY, IDEAL, IMAGE, THOUGHT[1]. Antonyms: actuality, fact, reality, substance.

i·de·al (ī·dē′əl, ī·dēl′) adj. 1 Pertaining to or existing in ideas; conceptional. 2 Of or pertaining to an ideal or perfection. 3 Conceived as perfect, supremely excellent, or very desirable. 4 Existing only in imagination or notion; of such perfection as to be practically unattainable. 5 In philosophy, existing as an archetypal idea or pattern. —n. 1 That which is taken as a standard of excellence or beauty; an ultimate object of attainment; model; type. 2 That which exists only in imagination. [<L idealis]

Synonyms (adj.): fancied, fanciful, imaginary, unreal, visionary. Compare IMAGINARY, ROMANTIC. See also PERFECT. Antonyms: actual, material, palpable, physical, real, substantial, tangible, visible.

Synonyms (noun): archetype, idea, model, original, pattern, prototype, standard. An ideal is that which is conceived or taken as the highest type of excellence or ultimate object of attainment. The archetype is the primal form, actual or imaginary, according to which any existing thing is constructed; the prototype has or has had actual existence; in the derived sense, as in metrology, a prototype may not be the original form, but one having equal authority with that as a standard. An ideal may be primal, or may be slowly developed even from failures and by negations; an ideal is meant to be perfect, the best conceivable thing that could by possibility be attained. The artist's ideal is his own mental image, of which his finished work is but an imperfect expression. The original is the first specimen, good or bad; the original of a master is superior to all copies. The standard may be below the ideal. The ideal is ordinarily unattainable; the standard is concrete, and ordinarily attainable, being a measure to which all else of its kind must conform; as, the standard of weights and measures, of corn, or of cotton. The idea of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in general: the ideal of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in its highest conceivable perfection. Compare EXAMPLE, IDEA. Antonyms: accomplishment, achievement, act, action, attainment, development, doing, embodiment, execution, fact, incarnation, performance, practice, reality, realization.

i·de·al·ism (ī·dē′əl·iz′əm) n. 1 Any of several philosophical theories that there is no reality, no world of objects or "thing-in-itself" apart from a reacting mind or consciousness; that only the mental is knowable, and therefore that reality is essentially spiritual or mental: variously developed by Berkeley, Kant, Hegel. 2 In literature, the development of subject matter following an imaginative or preconceived idea of perfection instead of adhering strictly to facts: opposed to realism. 3 The quest of the ideal; the habit of forming ideals and of striving after their realization; by extension, that which is so realized; the attainment of an ideal. 4 In art, the endeavor to attain perfection by improving and uniting in one form all the best qualities to be found in different individual forms. Idealism creates in conformity with a preconceived ideal; realism restricts the imaginative faculty.

i·de·al·ist (ī·dē′əl·ist) n. 1 One who idealizes, or seeks an ideal or ideal conditions; a visionary; a romantic. 2 An exponent of idealism in art or literature. 3 One who holds the doctrines of any philosophic idealism. —i·de′al·is′tic or ·ti·cal adj.—i·de′al·is′ti·cal·ly adv.

i·den·ti·cal (ī·den′ti·kəl) adj. 1 Absolutely the same; the very same. 2 Uniform with something else in quality, condition, execution, appearance, etc. [<Med. L identicus < idem the same] — i·den′ti·cal·ly adv. — i·den′ti·cal·ness n.

Synonyms: alike, equivalent, interchangeable, same, selfsame. Strictly, no two persons or things can be identical or the same. In looser usage, two volumes may be said to be identical or the same in contents; a carbon copy is identical in substance with the original, but it is not the same document. Two synonyms, as "begin" and "commence," may be in most cases equivalent and interchangeable, but one is not the same as the other, and at some point they will be found to draw apart, either in meaning or use. A check may be equivalent to the money specified, but it is not the same as cash. When a person or thing is surely recognized as the very one referred to, and no other, we say, "This is the identical man, the identical document," or "the same man, document." See SYNONYMOUS. Antonyms: contrary, different, dissimilar, distinct, unlike.

identical twin Genetics One of a pair of human offspring which develop from a division of a single fertilized egg cell. They are invariably of the same sex and exhibit similarities due to participation in the same genetic factors: distinguished from fraternal twin.

im·merse (i·mûrs′) v.t. ·mersed, ·mers·ing ▪ To plunge or dip entirely in water or other fluid. 2 To involve deeply; engross: He immersed himself in study. 3 To baptize by immersion. [<L immersus, pp. of immergere dip]

Synonyms: bury, dip, douse, duck, immerge, plunge, sink, submerge. Dip is a native word, while immerse is a Latin borrowing; dip is accordingly the more popular and commonplace, immerse the more elegant and dignified expression in many cases. To speak of baptism by immersion as dipping now seems rude, but was entirely proper and usual in early English. Baptists now universally use the word immerse. To dip and to immerse alike signify to bury or submerge some object in a liquid; but dip implies that the object dipped is at once removed from the liquid. Immerse suggests more absolute completeness of the action; one may dip his sleeve or dip a sponge in a liquid, if he but touches the edge; if he immerses it, he completely sinks it under, and covers it with the liquid. Submerge implies that the object cannot readily be removed, if at all; as, a submerged wreck. To plunge is to immerse suddenly and violently, for which douse and duck are colloquial terms. Dip is used, also, unlike the other words, to denote the putting of a hollow vessel into a liquid in order to remove a portion of it; in this sense we say dip up, dip out. Compare synonyms for BURY[1].

im·mer·sion (i·mûr′zhən, -shən) n. 1 The act of immersing or the state of being immersed; specifically, baptism by submersion in water. 2 The state of being overwhelmed or deeply engaged; absorption: immersion in business. 3 Astron. The disappearance of a heavenly body, either by passing behind another or by entering into the light of the sun or the shadow of the earth. In·do-Eu·ro·pe·an (in'dō·yo͝or'ə·pē'ən) n. 1 The largest family of languages in the world, assumed to have descended from an unrecorded common ancestor and comprising most of the languages of Europe and many languages of India and SW Asia. These languages are conventionally divided into two classifications, centum and satem (from the Latin and Avestan words for 'hundred'), primarily according to the representation of the proto-Indo-European palatalized velar (k) as velar stops in the centum (mainly western) division, and as sibilants in the satem (mainly eastern) division. The principal centum subfamilies are Hellenic, Italic, Celtic, and Germanic. The principal satem subfamilies are Indo-Iranian, Armenian, Albanian, and Balto-Slavic. Among the lesser-known, extinct languages which have been established as belonging to the Indo-European family are Hittite and Tocharian. Cuneiform Hittite is grouped with the centum languages, while Hieroglyphic Hittite is thought by some to be a satem language. Tocharian is generally classed with the centum languages. See also THRACIAN, PHRYGIAN, LIGURIAN, SICEL, ILLYRIAN, MESSAPIAN, and VENETIC. 2 The assumed prehistoric parent language of this family of languages: now fairly well reconstructed by linguists. — adj. Of or pertaining to the Indo-European family of languages, or to the peoples speaking them. Also Aryan, Indo-Germanic.

in·duc·tance (in·duk'təns) n. Electr. 1 The capacity of an electric circuit for responding to a magnetoelectrically induced current. 2 Self-induction in an electrical circuit or its equivalent, for purposes of measurement in terms of henries.

in·duc·tee (in'duk·tē') n. One inducted into military service.

in·duc·tion (in·duk'shən) n. 1 The process of causing an event or bringing about a conclusion by some particular path or course of reasoning. 2 Logic The process of inferring or aiming at the general from observation of the particular; specifically, the inference of a specific law of causational connection from the observation and analysis of some particular instance or instances. 3 Any conclusion reached by inductive reasoning. 4 In English ecclesiastical law, the formal installation of a person into an office or church living. 5 An introduction; especially, a preamble, prolog, or prelude foreshadowing the argument or character of a literary work. 6 The bringing forward of separate facts as evidence in order to prove a general statement. 7 Electr. The production of magnetization or electrification in a body by the mere proximity of a magnetic field or electric charge, or of an electric current in a conductor by the variation of the magnetic field in its vicinity. 8 Physiol. The stimulating effect of one tissue upon the growth or alteration of another. 9 The act or process of inducting, as for military service; initiation; installation. 10 Obs. A beginning or introduction to anything; that which leads to or induces a thing. — magnetic induction The magnetization of iron, steel, etc., by its introduction into a magnetic field. [<OF <L inductio, -onis] — in·duc'tion·al adj.

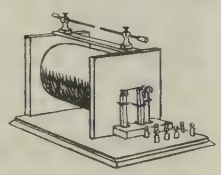
Synonyms: deduction, inference. Deduction is reasoning from the general to the particular; induction is reasoning from the particular to the general. In deduction, if the general rule is true, and the special case falls under the rule, the conclusion is certain; induction can ordinarily give no more than a probable conclusion, because we can never be sure that we have collated all instances. An induction is of the nature of an inference, but while an inference may be partial and hasty, an induction is careful, and aims to be complete. Compare DEMONSTRATION, INFERENCE.

induction coil Electr. An apparatus for generating currents by electromagnetic induction, consisting usually of two concentric coils of insulated wire enclosing an iron core. One of the coils, called the primary, is usually short and of thick wire, and the secondary long and of thin wire. An alternating current of high tension is induced in the secondary coil by rapid automatic making and breaking of the circuit in the primary.



INDUCTION COIL

in·duc·tive (in·duk'tiv) adj. 1 Pertaining to or proceeding by induction. 2 Produced by induction. 3 Introductory. [<LL inductivus] — in·duc'tive·ly adv. — in·duc'tive·ness n.

in·dus·tri·ous (in·dus'trē·əs) adj. 1 Assiduously or habitually occupied in any work, business, or pursuit. 2 Indicating diligence. 3 Industrial. [<F industrieux <L industriosus] — in·dus'tri·ous·ly adv. — in·dus'tri·ous·ness n.

Synonyms: active, assiduous, busy, diligent, employed, engaged, occupied, sedulous. Industrious signifies zealously or habitually applying oneself to any work or business. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. We say a man is busy just now; that is, occupied at the moment with something that takes his full attention. It would be ridiculous or satirical to say, He is industrious just now. But busy can be used in the sense of industrious, as when we say he is a busy man. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious, reader of the Bible. Compare ACTIVE, BUSY, INDEFATIGABLE.

in·dus·try (in'dəs·trē) n. pl. ·tries 1 Earnest or constant application to work or business. 2 Useful labor in general. 3 A special branch of productive work, or the capital or workers employed in it: the steel industry, the farming industry. 4 The mechanical and manufacturing branches of productive activity, as distinguished from agricultural. 5 Obs. Skill, dexterity; also, a clever device or contrivance. [<F industrie <L industria diligence < industrius diligent]

Synonyms: application, assiduity, attention, constancy, diligence, effort, exertion, intentness, labor, pains, patience, perseverance, persistence, sedulousness. Industry is the quality, action, or habit of earnest, steady, and continued attention or devotion to any useful or productive work or task, manual or mental. Assiduity (L ad, to, and sedere, sit), as the etymology suggests, sits down to a task until it is done. Diligence (L diligere, love, choose) invests more effort and exertion, with love of the work or deep interest in its accomplishment; application (L ad, to, and plicare, fold) bends to its work and concentrates all one's powers upon it with utmost intensity; hence, application can hardly be as unremitting as assiduity. Constancy is a steady devotion of heart and principle. Patience works on in spite of annoyances; perseverance overcomes hindrances and difficulties; persistence strives relentlessly against opposition; persistence has very frequently an unfavorable meaning, implying that one persists in spite of considerations that should induce him to desist. Industry is diligence applied to some vocation, business, or profession; hence, by derived use, the occupation itself. Labor and pains refer to the exertions of the worker and the tax upon him, while assiduity, perseverance, etc., refer to his continuance in the work. See BUSINESS. Antonyms: idleness, inattention, inconstancy, indolence, neglect, negligence, remissness, sloth.

in·dwell (in'dwel') v. ·dwelt, ·dwel·ling v.t. To dwell in; inhabit. — v.i. To dwell; abide: with in. — in'dwell'er n. — in'dwell'ing n.

In·dy (daṅ·dē'), Vincent d', 1851–1931, French composer.

Synonyms: absolute, boundless, countless, eternal, illimitable, immeasurable, innumerable, interminable, limitless, measureless, numberless, unbounded, unconditioned, unfathomable, unlimited, unmeasured. Infinite signifies without bounds or limits in any way, and may be applied to space, time, quantity, or number. Countless, innumerable, and numberless, which should be the same as infinite, are in common usage vaguely employed to denote what it is difficult or practically impossible to count or number, but still perhaps falling far short of infinite; as, countless leaves, the countless sands on the seashore, numberless battles, innumerable delays. So, too, boundless, illimitable, limitless, measureless, and unlimited are loosely used in reference to what has no apparent or readily determinable limits in space or time; as, we speak of the boundless ocean. Infinite space is without bounds, not only in fact, but in thought; infinite time is truly eternal. Compare ETERNAL, PERFECT. Antonyms: bounded, brief, circumscribed, evanescent, finite, limited, little, measurable, moderate, narrow, restricted, shallow, short, small, transient, transitory.

in·fin·i·ti·val (in·fin'ə·tī'vəl) adj. Gram. Of or pertaining to the infinitive mood of the verb. — in·fin'i·ti'val·ly adv.

in·fin·i·tive (in·fin'ə·tiv) Gram. adj. 1 Without limitation of person or number: opposed to finite. 2 Of, pertaining to, or using the infinitive mood. — n. In many languages, a mood of the verb expressing action or condition without the limitation of person or number, as to run. In English, its sign to is omitted after the auxiliaries can, could, do, may, might, must, shall, should, will, would, and after such phrases as had better, had rather, and is used optionally after bid, dare, help, let, make, need, please, see, etc. The infinitive may also function as a noun while retaining the ability of the verb to take objects and adverbial modifiers. Example: To ride horses was his favorite sport. Also infinitive mood. — split infinitive An expression in which the sign of the infinitive "to" is separated from its verb by an intervening word, usually an adverb, as in the phrase "to quickly return." Although the construction is often condemned, it is sometimes justified to escape ambiguity. [<LL infinitivus] in·fin·i·tude (in·fin'ə·tōōd, -tyōōd) n. 1 The quality of being infinite or boundless. 2 An infinite or unlimited quantity.

Synonyms: congenital, essential, immanent, inborn, inbred, indispensable, indwelling, infixed, ingrained, innate, inseparable, internal, intrinsic, inwrought, native, natural, subjective. Immanent is a philosophic word, to denote that which dwells in or pervades any substance or spirit without necessarily being a part of it. That which is inherent is an inseparable part of that in which it inheres, and is usually thought of with reference to some outworking or effect; as, an inherent difficulty. God is said to be immanent (not inherent) in the universe. Frequently intrinsic and inherent can be interchanged, but inherent applies to qualities, while intrinsic applies to essence, so that to speak of intrinsic excellence conveys higher praise than if we say inherent excellence. Inherent and intrinsic may be said of persons or things; congenital, inborn, inbred, innate, apply to living beings. Congenital is frequent in medical and legal use with special application to defects; as, congenital idiocy. Innate and inborn are almost identical, but innate is preferred in philosophic use, as when we speak of innate ideas; that which is inborn, congenital, or innate may be original with the individual, but that which is inbred is inherited. Ingrained signifies dyed in the grain, and denotes that which is deeply wrought into substance or character. See NATURAL. Antonyms: accidental, casual, external, extrinsic, fortuitous, incidental, outward, subsidiary, superadded, superficial, superfluous, superimposed, supplemental, transient, unconnected.

Synonyms: blemish, damage, detriment, disadvantage, evil, harm, hurt, impairment, injustice, loss, mischief, outrage, prejudice, wrong. Injury is the general term including all the rest. Whatever reduces the value, utility, beauty, or desirableness of anything is an injury to that thing; of persons, whatever is so done as to operate adversely to one in his person, rights, property, or reputation is an injury. Damage (L damnum, loss) is that which occasions loss to the possessor; hence, damage reduces value, utility, or beauty; detriment (L deterere, to rub or wear away) is similar in meaning, but far milder. As a rule, the slightest use of an article by a purchaser operates to its detriment if again offered for sale, even when the article may not have received the slightest damage. Damage is partial; loss is properly absolute as far as it is predicted at all; the loss of a ship implies that it is gone beyond recovery; the loss of the rudder is a damage to the ship; but since the loss of a part still leaves a part, we may speak of a partial or total loss. Evil commonly suggests suffering or sin, or both; as, the evils of poverty, the social evil. Harm is closely synonymous with injury; it may apply to body, mind, or estate, but always affects real worth, while injury may concern only estimated value. A hurt is an injury that causes pain, physical or mental; a slight hurt may be no real harm. Mischief is disarrangement, trouble, or harm usually caused by some voluntary agent, with or without injurious intent; a child's thoughtless sport may do great mischief; wrong is harm done with evil intent. An outrage combines insult and injury. Compare synonyms for BLEMISH, INJUSTICE, LOSS, OUTRAGE, VIOLENCE. Antonyms: advantage, amelioration, benefit, blessing, boon, help, improvement, remedy, service, utility.

in·jus·tice (in·jus′tis) n. 1 The violation or denial of justice. 2 An unjust act; a wrong. [<OF <L injustitia]

Synonyms: grievance, inequity, iniquity, injury, unfairness, unrighteousness, wrong. Injustice is a violation or denial of justice, an act or omission that is contrary to equity or justice; as, the injustice of unequal taxes. In legal usage a wrong involves injury to person, property, or reputation, as the result of evil intent; injustice applies to civil damage or loss, not necessarily involving injury to person or property, as by misrepresentation of goods which does not amount to a legal warranty. In popular usage, injustice may involve no direct injury to person, property, interest, or character, and no harmful intent, while wrong always involves both; one who attributes another's truly generous act to ▪ selfish motive does him an injustice. Compare synonyms for INJURY, SIN. Antonyms: equity, fairness, faithfulness, honesty, honor, impartiality, integrity, justice, lawfulness, rectitude, right, righteousness, uprightness.

Synonyms (adj.): blameless, clean, clear, faultless, guileless, guiltless, harmless, immaculate, innocuous, innoxious, inoffensive, pure, right, righteous, sinless, spotless, stainless, upright, virtuous. Innocent, in the full sense, signifies not tainted with sin; not having done wrong or violated legal or moral precept or duty; as, an innocent babe. Innocent is a negative word, expressing less than righteous, upright, or virtuous, which imply knowledge of good and evil, with free choice of the good. A little child or a lamb is innocent; a tried and faithful man is righteous, upright, virtuous. Immaculate, pure, and sinless may be used either of one who has never known the possibility of evil or of one who has perfectly and triumphantly resisted it. Innocent, in a specific case, signifies free from the guilt of a particular act, even when the total character may be very evil; as, The thief was found to be innocent of the murder. See CANDID, PURE. Antonyms: compare synonyms for CRIMINAL.

Also spelled enquire. [<L inquirere inquire into < in- into + quaerere seek] —in·quir'a·ble adj. —in·quir'er n. —in·quir'ing adj. —in·quir'ing·ly adv.

Synonyms: ask, examine, interrogate, query, question. One may either ask or inquire one's way. In this sense ask and inquire are nearly interchangeable, chiefly differing in the fact that ask is the popular and inquire the more formal word, although ask has place in the best literary use. Also, ask has more reference to the presence of a second person; the solitary investigator inquires rather than asks the cause of some phenomenon: in this sense ask is often used reflexively; as, "I asked myself why this happened." Inquire into thus becomes a natural synonym for examine, investigate, etc. Compare ASK, EXAMINE, QUESTION.

in·quir·y (in·kwīr'ē, in'kwə·rē) n. pl. ·quir·ies 1 The act of inquiring. 2 Investigation; research; search for knowledge. 3 A query. [ME enquere] in·quis·i·tive (in·kwiz'ə·tiv) adj. 1 Given to questioning, especially for the gratification of curiosity; prying: an inquisitive busybody. 2 Inclined to the pursuit of knowledge. [<L inquisitus] —in·quis'i·tive·ly adv. —in·quis'i·tive·ness n.

Synonyms: curious, inquiring, intrusive, meddlesome, meddling, peeping, prying, scrutinizing, searching. An inquisitive person is one who is bent on finding out all that can be found out by inquiry, especially of little and personal matters, and hence is generally meddlesome and prying. Inquisitive may be used in a good sense, but in such connection inquiring is to be preferred; as, an inquiring mind. As applied to a state of mind, curious denotes a keen and rather pleasurable desire to know fully something to which one's attention has been called, but without the active tendency that inquisitive implies; a well-bred person may be curious to know, but will not be inquisitive in trying to ascertain what is of interest in the affairs of another. Antonyms:

apathetic, careless, heedless, inattentive, indifferent, unconcerned, uninterested.

in·quis·i·tor (in·kwiz′ə·tər) n. 1 One who inquires or investigates; specifically, an official whose duty it is to investigate or examine. 2 A member of the Inquisition. [<OF inquisiteur <L inquisitor]
